In a free society, can the federal government, under the pretext of economic and wartime conditions, unilaterally expand the parameters of the Commerce Clause to dictate what crops people can plant for their own use and how much they can plant? Be careful how you answer this question, dear reader, since your answer will not be heard by the sound you make from your voice (yes or no), but by the chains future generations will hear jingling from your wrists, ankles and rattling inside your mind.

In my continuing series on justices of the U.S. Supreme Court, we now come to a justice and a case that served as the foundation President Obama believed gave him the power and authority to force hundreds of millions of otherwise free American citizens to purchase health care via an unconstitutional “mandate” – a tax originated by Obama dictating that all Americans must buy his version of universal health care or else. Obama’s fascist decree is not only tyrannical, it is pure madness.
